

From: Chuck Greene
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/11/02 10:34am
Subject: Microsoft

I find it rather amusing that Microsoft wants to block the public from knowing what their executives or whomever testifies for them. I believe most likely their motion will be denied. Microsoft with their track record with distorting the truth is probably well known, so I will assume the judge is aware of this.

Secondly, if Microsoft believes they did nothing wrong, that they are the true innovators of the industry, the same people who allowed "the open source movement to exist," what are they afraid of? Why enter a motion to deny the public to information they're entitled to?

Remember Bill Gates' deposition? That was a joke! The guy was lying through his teeth the whole time and when the public viewed his deposition, it was a joke! I'm surprised they haven't found Bill Gates with contempt of court.

Again, this shows if it were you (John Q. Citizen) or me, we would have had the book (the law) thrown at us and the judge would have had a field day with us.

---

Do You Yahoo!?
Send FREE video emails in Yahoo! Mail!
<http://promo.yahoo.com/videomail/>